

Become a member of Woman's Press Club of Indiana

When you join WPCI, you also join NFPW - in one easy step!

Woman's Press Club of Indiana is a professional organization for women and men working in or studying any form of communications. Our members are journalists, photojournalists, graphic designers, bloggers, novelists, non-fiction writers, publicists, social media experts, television and radio reporters, working in and around Indiana.

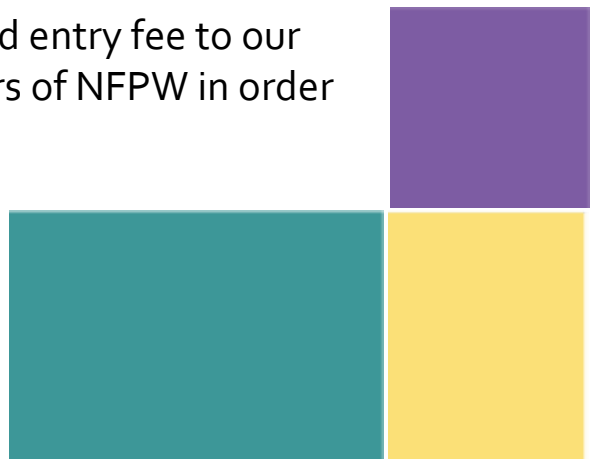

As an affiliate of the National Federation of Press Women, we offer the opportunity to network with fellow professional communicators around the country.

Membership in Woman's Press Club of Indiana provides opportunities for leadership development by serving on our committees and board, helping to guide our organization. We offer something for anyone who is interested in being actively involved, which is truly the best way to get something out of a professional organization.

WPCI's communications contest is another great reason to be a member. Our contest is the gateway into the NFPW contest as our first place winners advance for consideration at the national level. WPCI members pay a discounted entry fee to our contest and winners must be members of NFPW in order to be considered at the national level.
